Important to American Mechanics. A dispatch has been received at the Department of State from the United States Consul at Liverpool, referring to the fact that thirty-five joiners have recently landed at that port, for Manchester, under a contract to work at their trade for a given number of months. These men were brought over to take the places of the English joiners who were on a strike for higher wages. Referring to the landing of American mechanics under a contract, and the published statements in some American newspapers that fewer men are out of employment in England than in the United States, the Consul solemnly warns our mechanics against the danger of putting these statements to the test. These reports have induced many American mechanics to leave the country for the purpose of bettering their condition, and the result has been a large amount of suffering and destitution. To avoid any further aug- City. mentation of their suffering the Consul requests that public warning be given to Americann workmen not to go to England unless under they learn that Consuls have no nds for such relief purposes. Under these circumstances the Consuldeems it his duty to inform the State Department that neither skilled nor unskilled workmen who come from abroad can find employment in England.
